

Fishing is a great way to enjoy nature, relieve stress, and catch some delicious dinner. However, one of the biggest challenges of fishing is keeping your fishing pole in place, especially when you need both hands free to bait a hook, tie a knot, or reel in a catch. That's where fishing pole holders come in. From simple DIY solutions to high-tech gadgets, there are many types of fishing pole holders that can make your fishing experience more convenient and enjoyable. In this article, we will introduce 10 types of fishing pole holders every angler should know.

- 1. Banksticks Banksticks are the most basic type of fishing pole holder. They are long and straight metal or plastic rods with pointed tips that you can insert into the ground. Banksticks usually have a screw or a clip on the top that can hold your fishing pole in place. They are simple, cheap, and easy to carry, but may not be very stable in soft or muddy soil.
- 2. Rod pods Rod pods are adjustable and versatile fishing pole holders that can hold multiple rods at once. They consist of a central frame or pod, usually made of metal or carbon fiber, that rests on the ground or a tripod. The frame has adjustable legs or arms that can be extended or angled to fit the terrain and the fishing rods. Some rod pods also have alarms or indicators that can alert you when you have a bite.
- 3. Fishing rod racks Fishing rod racks are a more sophisticated and organized way to store and transport your fishing poles. They come in different shapes and sizes, from small wall-mounted racks to large mobile carts, and can hold several rods at once. Fishing rod racks usually have cushioned slots or holders that can protect your rods from scratches or damage. They are great for anglers who have many fishing rods or change locations frequently.
- 4. Fishing rod holders for boats If you are fishing from a boat, you need a fishing rod holder that can secure your rod in place while you navigate or troll. Fishing rod holders for boats come in different styles, such as flush-mount, clamp-on, or gimbal. Flush-mount holders are installed directly on the boat surface and look sleek and low-profile. Clamp-on holders can be attached to various parts of the boat, such as the gunwale or the rail, and can be moved or removed easily. Gimbal holders are heavy-duty and swiveling holders that can absorb the shock of big fish or waves.
- 5. Kayak fishing rod holders Kayak fishing is becoming more popular every year, and for good reason. Kayaks are affordable, portable, and can access remote or shallow waters that larger boats cannot. However, kayaks have limited space and stability, so you need a fishing pole holder that can fit your kayak and keep your rod secure. Kayak fishing rod holders come in different types, such as flush-mount, clamp-on, or inflatable. They are usually made of lightweight and durable materials, such as plastic, aluminum, or carbon fiber.
- 6. Ice fishing rod holders If you are brave enough to go ice fishing, you need a fishing pole holder that can withstand the cold temperatures and the harsh elements. Ice fishing rod holders come in different styles, such as tip-ups, jaw-jackers, or rattle reels. Tip-ups are wooden or plastic frames that hold the fishing line above the hole and have a flag that pops up when you have a catch. Jaw-jackers are similar to tip-ups but have a mechanical trigger that sets the hook automatically. Rattle reels are handheld or fixed reels that make a noise when you have a bite.
- 7. Bankside pod systems Bankside pod systems are a more advanced and modular version of banksticks. They consist of a central hub or pod that can be attached to different types of legs, brackets, or arms. The pod can hold multiple fishing rods at once and can be adjusted or leveled to fit the terrain. Bankside pod systems are great for anglers who want more flexibility and stability than traditional banksticks.
- 8. Bucket fishing rod holders Bucket fishing rod holders are a simple and ingenious way to turn any bucket into a fishing pole holder. They consist of a metal or plastic bracket that can be clamped or screwed onto the edge of a bucket. The bracket has a rod holder that can accommodate most fishing poles. Bucket fishing rod holders are cheap, portable, and can double as storage containers for bait or tackle.
- 9. Magnetic fishing rod holders Magnetic fishing rod holders are a high-tech and innovative way to store and display your fishing poles. They consist of a powerful magnet embedded in a wooden or plastic block that can hold your metal fishing rods vertically or horizontally. Magnetic fishing rod holders are great for anglers who want to showcase their prized rods or save space in their garage or cabin.
- 10. Wall-mounted fishing rod holders Wall-mounted fishing rod holders are a stylish and functional way to store and decorate your fishing rods. They come in different shapes and designs, from rustic wood racks to modern metal sculptures. Wall-mounted fishing rod holders can save floor space and protect your fishing poles from damage or dust. They are also great for anglers who want to show off their collection of vintage or custom fishing rods.

In conclusion, fishing pole holders are not just accessories or gadgets, but essential tools that can enhance your fishing experience and increase your catch rate. Whether you prefer banksticks, rod pods, fishing rod racks, fishing rod holders for boats, kayak fishing rod holders, ice fishing rod holders, bankside pod systems, bucket fishing rod holders, magnetic fishing rod holders, or wall-mounted fishing rod holders, there is a type of fishing pole holder that can fit your needs, budget, and style. So, next time you go fishing, don't forget to pack your favorite fishing pole holder and enjoy the feeling of having your hands free and your lines tight!

References

- fishing pole holder